ELIGIBILITY FOR AWARDS

Nominees must meet the following eligibility requirements:

- Employed 50% time or greater during the academic year in which they are nominated.
- Have at least five years of service (as defined in ASPP 1.03, Years of Academic Staff Service) as an academic staff member, limited appointee with an academic staff backup appointment, limited appointee with no backup appointment, or a limited appointee with a university staff backup appointment.

THE AWARDS

Nine prestigious awards in seven categories recognizing excellence by UW-Madison academic staff are presented annually:

The Chancellor's Hilldale Award for Excellence in Teaching (one award)

The primary mission of UW-Madison, and one of its greatest strengths, is the instruction that it provides to students. Academic staff teach classes and support the instruction received by thousands of students each semester.

Those nominated for this award shall provide and support instruction.

The Chancellor's Awards for Excellence in Research (two awards)

UW-Madison is one of the nation's largest public research universities. Academic staff serving as principal investigators or as project research personnel perform critical research functions and make possible the advancement of knowledge and the service to humankind that results. Candidates will be considered in different arenas as follows:

1. Individuals functioning as an independent investigator (one award)
2. Individuals providing critical research support (one award)

Those nominated for these awards shall conduct or support the university's research mission.

The Chancellor's Award for Excellence in Service to the University (one award)

Many academic staff consistently go beyond the responsibilities of their positions and demonstrate outstanding sustained service and dedication to the university as well as to their individual units. It is this type of dedication that has made UW-Madison a world-class public research university.

Those nominated for this award shall have demonstrated outstanding, long-term personal commitment to the greater university community.

The Chancellor's Award for Excellence in Leadership (two awards)

Academic staff from many arenas of responsibility make it possible for the university to serve the more than 50,000 people who work and study on the UW-Madison campus. Academic staff may manage facilities, direct business services, or ensure the smooth functioning of classrooms, laboratories, libraries, and student service offices. The leadership awards will recognize nominees from different arenas of responsibility as follows:

1. Academic staff who demonstrate leadership at the college, school, or the larger university community level (one award).
2. Academic staff who demonstrate leadership within an individual unit (one award).

Those nominated for these awards shall have demonstrated exceptional organizational leadership.

The Robert and Carroll Heideman Award for Excellence in Public Service and Outreach (one award)

Academic staff play a key role in the state, national, and international public service mission of the university. Following the "Wisconsin Idea," the UW-Madison enhances the economic vitality of the state, and the cultural and social life of residents by sharing knowledge, talents, and skills. Other academic staff provide direct services to students or to the many people who use university facilities each year.

Those nominated for this award shall be involved in on- or off-campus outreach that reflects the public service mission of the university.

Martha Casey Award for Dedication to Excellence (one award)

The efforts and knowledge of a dedicated staff member at the university can make the difference between something functioning smoothly and efficiently and it working poorly or not at all. This award recognizes staff who perform their assigned jobs outstandingly and thereby make things work. They are typically not managers who supervise others; rather they are on the front lines of day-to-day work and lead from within the organization. Their dedication to the university and its mission are obvious. The term "unsung hero" is often applied to them.

Nominees' specific contributions may range from overseeing a key process in an administrative office, to analyzing data so that it is meaningful to decision makers, to providing the "institutional memory" for an office. Their expertise comes from day-to-day attention to detail, and they take pride in using their in-depth knowledge to find constructive solutions to problems. This dedication may not receive wide recognition outside their own offices because their work is relatively specific to one area. However, people who do work with them or need to use their expertise quickly realize how essential they are and seek them out often. In addition, the impact of their work extends beyond their unit and clearly contributes to the fulfillment of the university's mission.

Those nominated for this award demonstrate consistent dedication to outstanding day-to-day job performance. Their work directly or indirectly affects the larger university's mission and operation, and this impact should also be considered.

The Ann Wallace Career Achievement Award (one award)

This award recognizes a retiring academic staff member who has provided leadership on behalf of academic staff across the campus and in addition has had a distinguished career. The individual need not have been actively involved in formal governance activities, but might have made other contributions that helped academic staff beyond the employing unit. In addition, nominees must have had a laudable career and must have demonstrated leadership and adherence to the highest level of professional standards in carrying out the duties of their positions.

Nominations must demonstrate (1) excellence in activities that help academic staff across the campus, such as service on governance committees or other leadership on issues of concern to academic staff and (2) excellence as an employee, such as service that is in all ways outstanding and is a model for faculty and staff on how to serve the institution. Nominees must have adhered to the highest level of professional standards.

Those nominated for this award shall be academic staff who have retired in the previous calendar year or are retiring in the academic year in which the award is given and who have been UW-Madison academic staff for at least 15 years.

NOMINATION MATERIALS

The nomination materials shall contain supporting documents in the following order (please note a cover page is no longer necessary):

1. Letter of nomination. Any staff member, faculty member, student, or member of the community may initiate the letter. To give the candidate the most favorable consideration, the letter of nomination should: a) describe how the nominee demonstrates excellence in the specific award category, and b) address the general award criteria.

2. Supporting letters. These letters of support (no more than four) shall come from people such as other staff members, faculty members, students, and members of the community and shall address the candidate's qualifications for the specific award, not simply excellence of performance. Letters demonstrating a broad spectrum of support are often most effective.
3. A résumé or curriculum vita of applicable professional experiences and accomplishments.
4. Additional supporting material (not additional letters of support), provided at the discretion of the nominator.
5. For teaching awards, a succinct summary of teaching or course evaluations (rather than a collection of actual evaluations) must be included.

Nomination materials for all awards are reviewed by a committee including previous Academic Staff Excellence Award winners and members of the Academic Staff Professional Development and Recognition Committee (PDRC). All nomination materials are confidential. No submitted materials will be returned unless requested by the nominator at the time of submission.
